As, lowever, the mest of the company were possessed of that valuable philosophy which enables a man to bear up with fortitude against the instortance for his neighbors, they been managed to console themselves for the tragic end of the veteran. The landlord was happy that the poor dear man had paid his reckening before he west.

"He came in a storm and he went in a storm; he came in the night; he came nobody, knows from whence and he has gone nobody knows where. For aught I know he has gone to see once more on his chest and may land to bother some people on the other side of the world. Though like a thousand pittes," added the landlord, "if the has gone to Bay Jonis that he had not left his see chest behind him."

The dismal occurrence of the night and, this idlaual; narrations, they had made, had left a supersitions feeling in overy mind. They cast a fearful glance all on shere, and a volley of executions by those on heard; but beat and man ware hurried away by the rushing swiftness of the tide. A pitrhy darkness succeed; Welfert Wobler indeed fancied that he distinguished a cry for help, and that he beheld the drowning man beckning again gleamed along the water all was drian and yeld. Neither man nor beak was to be seen; nothing but the dashing and weltering of the waves as they hurried past.

The company returned to the tavern, for they could not leave it before the storm should subside. They recumed their seats and gazed on each other with disaday. The whole transaction had not occupied five minutes and not a dozen words had been spoken. When they looked at the caken chair they could acarcely realize the fact that the strange being who had so lately tenanted it, rail of life and her calcan vigor, should already be a corpec.

his going to sen on his class!, I recollect what happened to Skipper Onderdonk's alip on his voyage from Amsterdam.

"The bootswain died during a storm, so they wrapped lilling in a sheet and put hind in his own sea cleet, and threw him overboard; but they neglected in their hurry-skurry to say prayers over him-and the storm langed and reared londer than ever, and they saw the dead man seated in his chest, with his shroud for a self, coming hard after the ship, and the sea breaking before him in great sprays! like fire, and there they kept soudding day after day and night after night, expecting every moment to go to scuiding day after day and night after night, expecting every moment to go to wreck; and overy night they saw the dead locatswain in list see cheet trying to get upl with them, and they heard his whistle above the blasts of wind, and he seemed to send great seas meant in high after them, that would have swamped the shift they had not put up the dead lights. And so it went on till they lest sight of him in the form of Newfoundland, and supposed he had vecred ship and stood for Dead Man's Lale. So much for burying a man at see without spying

The thunder gust which had, lither to detained the company was now at an entil The cuckeo clock in the hall struck midnight; every one pressed to depart, for sedden was such a late hour treepassed on by these quiet bugglers. As they salled forth they found the heavens once more screae. The sterm which had lately obscured them had rolled away and thy piled up in theey masses on the horizon, lighted up by the bright crescent of the moon, which locked like a silver larap hung up in a palace of clouds.

and the idental narrations they had made, had left a supersilious feeding in overy mind? They east a fearful glance at the epot where the butcamper had disappeared, almost expecting in see him aniling on his client in the cool moonable. The tremblidg rayst glittered along the waters, but all was placid and the current climpled over the spot where he had gone down. The party huddled together in a little crowd as they repaired homewards, particularly when they passed a lonely field where in him had been, murdered; and he which had farthest to got and had to complete his journey alone, though a yestern sexton, and accustomed, one, would think to ghests and scollins, yet went a long way mand, rather than pussy his own churchly and.

privately to seek out the negro fisherman and get him to serve as guide to the place where he had witnessed the mysterious scene of, interment. Sam was easily found; for he was one of those old habifrund; for he was one of those old habit-lial beings that live about a neighbor-hood until they wear; themselves a place in the public mind, and become, in a man-tier, public characters. There was not an injusty urchin about the town that did not know Mud Sim' the fisherman, and fairly that he had a right to play his tricky upon the old negro. Sam was an amphibious kind of animal, something mere of a fish than animan' he had led the life of an otter for more than half a contur, about the shores of the bey, and

He passed the growner particularly about Hell Glate, and might have been taken in had weather for one of the hobsoblins that used to haunt that strait. There would he be seen at all times and in all weathers, sometimes in the strik. 19 00 Seen at all times and in all wenthers; sometimes in his skiff, anchored among the eddles or prowling like a shark about some wreck, where the fish are supposed to be most abundant. Sometimes scated on a rock from ant. Sometimes seated on a rock from hour to hour, locuning through raist and drizzle, like a 'solitary/hopen' watching for its prey. He was well acquainted with every hole and corner of the sound! from the Wallabout to Hell Gate and from Hell Gato even unto the Dovil's Stepping Stones, and it was even affirmed that he knew all the fish, in the river by Short Cuts. . . •
